Director's Message

The world has always concerned itself with devices for measurement, and the accumulation of these, if properly categorized, would prove to be an imposing, if not impossible, document. Many of these devices each of us uses daily, and they have become so common in actual use that none of us is completely aware of their importance. Students generally conceive of measurement almost exclusively in the fields of testing and grading in subject matter fields where rulers, microscopes, slide-rules and other required paraphernalia are accepted as "tools of learing."

The events in the Fall of 1957 focused in blinding light what many considered an emergency need for adequate and drastic measures to increase the scientific content of school curricula from primary to post-graduate levels. Our failure to measure effectively the progress of the United States and the other free countries in these fields seemed painfully apparent. The visible evidence that scientific superiority has passed from the West to the Russians makes clear the fact that our means for calculating and measuring our progress against theirs were at fault. From the near pandemonium which developed there emerged a frighteningly evident trend toward basing all judgment concerning future security and happiness upon regaining superiority in the scientific field. Although no one can properly question the advisability of stepping up and increasing the curriculum content to include proper training in science and mathematics, it seems important to muffle the panic bell in those school areas where such training now does exist. This muffling of the frightening sound with which any alarm bell fills the air makes possible improvement in the presentation of courses in science and mathematics without eliminating but rather also improving the equally important courses in the humanities.

This TIGER of 1958 should, if carefully read, give positive proof that the needed and necessary training for leadership in the world, the world of science and of human affairs, can be accomplished without educational rescue squads, re-surveying surveys on curricula, and the probably resulting lopsided curricula which could emerge if those who see but one phase of the pendulum's swing become the directors of destiny. The most important thing that our 1958 TIGER represents is the students' compendium of the year's activities divided equitably and reported honestly. The one factor which melds this report into a significant whole is the students' understanding that the reported parts of school life all belong and no picture of their school experience for the year would have proper dimension if it were separated from the whole.

This wisdom of youth, if understood and guided, represents the promise of ultimate leadership within our own country and among those countries which share our understanding for the need of individual freedom. To develop within this framework skills and abilities possessed by our students is the certain method of guaranteeing security — for all security ultimately depends upon one's ability and willingness to work constantly in varied fields to achieve it.

Here we are on the final page of the yearbook. The pressure is off; the editor and staff can relax. There is time now to reflect upon the work we have done, on the book we have created. At such time the editor thinks belatedly of what should have been done and what should not have been done, and he thinks of the many people whose contributions of time and effort were so necessary to the completion of the yearbook. And it is in this spirit of appreciation that we say,

Thank you, Jim Powell and the Mirro-Graphic Yearbook Company, for your much needed advice and help as well as the fine printing job;

Thank you, Don Bosco, for the senior and activity pictures;

Thank you, Plymouth Studios, for the undergrad's pictures;

From the editor thank you, staff, for being the most capable, cooperative, and dependable staff an editor could wish for;

And thank you, Mrs. Teterin, for burning the midnight oil with us so that we could meet our deadlines.

In closing, the editor and staff of the Tiger sincerely hope that you have enjoyed the yearbook. We have tried to include all phases of school life, but unfortunately because of the ever-present limitations on time and space it has been possible to present only a brief sampling. We hope, however, that in the future the Tiger will serve as an outline and that your memory will fill in the details of your days at Lick-Wilmerding.
